

“In the end, [this book] beautifully illustrates that all of us are shaped by our families, our struggles, and our demons—just as Hemingway was.”

Many people joined me on this journey. Where to begin? I would like to thank my editor, Amy Coombes, for her eye for detail. She found the tiniest of mistakes while helping me remain consistent and nonrepetitive. Also, I'd like to thank three beta readers for their valuable editorial input: Dermot Ross, Richard Reisinger, and John Hargrove. Other readers with significant input include Lucinda Poole, Andrew Theising, Rev. Dr. W. Wayne Fraser, Christine Whitehead, Robb Ainley, and Steve Metzger. I am also thankful for the insight provided by researchers Marino Perissinotto, Bruno Marcuzzo, James McGrath Morris, and James Nagel, all of whom answered questions about Hemingway's experience as an American Red Cross volunteer in World War I. George Mason was gracious enough to provide information and several photos about Grant and Jane Mason; George is Grant's only biological son. Stephen Bates provided information and a photo of his grandfather, Captain Robert W. Bates. South African songwriter and artist Tony Ridgway merits a big thank you for providing the sketches sprinkled throughout.

Thank you to my former colleagues at California State University, Chico: Professors George H. Rogers, Jim Sager, Steve Adams, Sally Adams, Marc Siegel, Linda Clark-Borre, Ken Derucher (and his wife, Barbara), Colleen Robb, Rob Burton, and Richard N. Davis. Other colleagues include Chico State administrators Abe Bailly, Julie Mattoon Garnett (and her husband, Rex), and Sandra Jensen. Also, I am indebted to former Chico State presidents Manuel A. Esteban and Paul Zingg, as well as former provost, Scott G. McNall. Also, thanks to current faculty members Ken Chapman, Bonnie Persons, Patrick Newell and Matt Meuter.

I wish to acknowledge my friends from Chico over the years, especially alumni university student leaders who were members of Students for the Advancement of Global Entrepreneurship (SAGE), including Rob Best, Carol Furtado, Jonathan Gomez, Miguel Ramirez, Kyle Robins, Diego Garcia, Kunal Bhavsar, Blake Garcia, Sarah McComish, Elizabeth Wendorf, Daniel Fearing, Max Frederick, Danny Gross, and Rob Martinez. Also, a heartfelt thanks to SAGE friends and donors Judy Sitton, Katie Gonser, Ken Grossman, Sierra Grossman, Elfrena Ford, Mark Sewell, Matson Sewell, Lisa Sewell, Peter Fagen, Joan Bergy, Ed Byers, Glen Thomas, Helen Shi, Van Ajemian, Ken Pasternak, Pete Eimer, Betsy Eimer, Chris Coutant, and Steve Drenth.

Other Chico friends include Dr. David Bunganich and his wife, Lori. Dave makes the best chicken piccata in the world, and Lori loves her kitties (but not as much as she loves David). The backyard barbecues and swims in their pool made long summer nights in Chico, California memorable and sweet. Next, I want to say thanks to Tim Colbie, a travel agent extraordinaire, and Melissa Tamez, who now lives in New York City. A warm thank you is extended to Daisy Emily Gomez. Daisy traveled with me throughout Europe, and with her husband, Josue Guillen, to capture photos of Hemingway's west—Wyoming, Montana and Idaho. Daisy is an amazing photographer and an even better human being. Thanks to Robert Derucher for his friendship over the years. And I couldn't have asked for two better neighbors than Sandy Fisher and Durl Van Alstyne.

I want to recognize high school friends Dave Fields, Bruce Jongerius, Harold Hommes, Kent Kluver, Lynne Megan (and her husband, Kevin), Scott Slade, Jeff (Chuck) Slade, and Greg Anderson. Rock Rapids, Iowa and Central Lyon High School will always hold a special place in my heart. It is truly home.

I am grateful to my pals from undergraduate years at the University of Northern Iowa who have remained lifelong friends: Bright Ebenezer, Tim Hermesen, Rich Johnson, and his wife, Kathy. Also, thank you to my friends from graduate student years at Oklahoma State University: Josh Mihesuah, Kelly Hardin, Bud Lacy, and dissertation chair, Don Hansen. My friends at Arizona State University include Philip Regier, Cheryl Regier, and Steven Kaplan.

Tracy Connolly, my daughter-in-law, and my granddaughter, Kaitlyn, from South Lake Tahoe, California, have been in touch with me throughout the years. My cousin LaVerle James Vust, who once owned a home on Geiger Key in Key West, is like a brother. He lit my fire for Hemingway when I visited him almost twenty years ago. I have wonderful kayaking memories with LaVerle, who suggested that I read one of Michael Reynolds' biographies about Hemingway. I took his advice and became hooked on the great writer.

Malgorzata (Gosia) Śmigielska is an angel on earth, especially when I was hospitalized in 2016. The world needs more people like Gosia.

Thanks to my beautiful daughter, Julie Connolly Morrison, who now lives in Glasgow, Scotland with her husband, Stan, along with my two granddaughters, Isla and Skye. And thank you to Julie's mother, Kristine, who remains a very close friend. A special thank you is extended to my stepmother, Don Nita DeBerg, who made my dad's last few years on earth the happiest of his life.

A special note of gratitude is extended to my late parents, Ruby Lee Kutil and James LeRoy DeBerg. They taught my brothers and me how to persevere, work hard, take risks, and pursue adventure. We said goodbye to Dad in December 1995 and Mom in November 2018. And what can I say about my three brothers, Craig, Jarvis, and Del, except how much I love them. They, along with their wives, Gloria, Mary, and Karen, and their children (CJ, William, Philip, Jakob, Henry, Chandler, and Drew) must put up with me each time I return to the Midwest for holidays, weddings, and fishing trips.

A poignant and bittersweet note of gratitude goes to the late, crazy, funny, and superb gentleman, Paul Kamarmeyer. I have dedicated this book to Paul. We went to high school and the University of Northern Iowa together and remained close friends until his untimely death in 2017. He married his beautiful wife, Laura, in 1980, and had three adoring daughters, Jill, Jamie, and Megan. I think of Paul every day. He lives today through the eyes of his children and grandchildren.

Last, merci beaucoup, Marie Lange Clément Delacroix. To fall in love in Paris is a dream. Wake me up. Je t'aime.
